Management

Project Direction

The administrative and intellectual direction of the InterPARES 3 Project was the responsibility of the Project Director, Luciana Duranti. In carrying it out, the Project Director was supported by the InterPARES 3 International TEAM, composed of the Directors of all regional, national and multinational TEAMS and, ex-officio, the Project Coordinator, Randy Preston (2007-2011) and Alexandra Allen (2011-2012), and the Technical Coordinator, Jean-Pascal Morghese.

The InterPARES 3 Project Office was located at the School of Library, Archival and Information Studies of The University of British Columbia. The staff members were:

Project Coordinator: Randy Preston (2007-2011), Alexandra Allen (2011-12)

Technical Coordinator: Jean-Pascal Morghese (2007-2012)

Project Assistant: Sandy Orr (2007-2012)

Communication and Meetings

The Project Director and the International TEAM met twice a year for an International TEAM Summit to:

- establish the research plan for the following semester;
- determine research activities;
- discuss the research progress;
- steer the direction of the research as appropriate;
- share the findings and reconcile them where appropriate;
- decide on dissemination activities; and
- deliberate on any issue that was brought to the International TEAM's attention by the InterPARES 3 Director or any of the regional, national or multinational TEAMS' Directors.

These Summits occurred in connection with semi-annual International Symposia, which were held each time in a different country.

Each TEAM held two Plenary Workshops a year to:

- allow all TEAM researchers, partners and research assistants the opportunity to engage in scholarly debate and the development of new knowledge;
- review and discuss case study and general study research, activities, findings and outcomes;
- assign tasks and responsibilities; and
- perform research activities that required the simultaneous physical presence of TEAM members (e.g., modeling).

International Summits and Plenary Workshops were the primary means of ensuring interdisciplinarity, transferability of results, open inquiry, and coherence among multiple methodologies and disciplinary and cultural outlooks.

Funding

Major funding for the InterPARES 3 Project was provided by The Social Sciences and Humanities Research Council of Canada's Community-University Research Alliances (SSHRC-CURA). Matching funds were provided by The University of British Columbia's Vice President Research Development Fund, the Dean of Arts, and the School of Library, Archival and Information Studies. Individual TEAMS had their own funding.

Project Overview

Digital records and the applications that generate them have affected every aspect of business, research, government and domestic life. Email, e-voting ballots, research and survey data, financial company records, and digital art are just some of the materials used in the day-to-day operation of modern society. The keepers of these records need to maintain them in a way that their reliability, accuracy and authenticity can be demonstrated at any time to support, for example, research and innovation, legal validation, copyright and patent litigation, scientific discovery, issues of ownership and precedence for governments and individuals, and accountability. Long-term authentic preservation also needs to be a primary concern, firstly, because generations of digital material have already been lost due to changing technology and inadequate preservation practices, and secondly, because the authenticity of digital materials that have survived is currently difficult, if not impossible, to prove.

These issues have been addressed by several research projects which have developed knowledge essential to the long-term preservation of authentic records created and/or maintained in digital form, thereby providing the basis from which model policies, strategies and standards capable of ensuring the longevity of digital material and the ability of its users to trust its authenticity have been formulated. However, a key finding of the most comprehensive of these projects, InterPARES 1 & 2, is that, although the body of concepts, principles and methods developed through scientific research constitutes the essential foundation and framework of best practices, any solution to digital preservation problems is situation specific, and must be devised by preservers taking into account: a) the cultural, administrative, legal, and functional context in which they operate, b) the nature and characteristics of the organizations producing the digital material to be preserved, c) the typology of the material produced and its documentary and technological features, d) the limitations imposed by the available financial and human resources, e) the organizational culture of both the producer of the material and the preserver, and g) access to educated professionals or educational programs and resources. Furthermore, while the conceptual and methodological findings of InterPARES 1 & 2 and other research projects are equally applicable to larger and smaller organizations and programs, archives with limited resources, which often have the greatest need for assistance, will find the outcomes of the research difficult to apply without specific directions on how to move forward.

InterPARES 3 has translated the theory and methods of digital preservation drawn from research into concrete action plans for existing bodies of records that are to be kept over the long term by archives and archival/records units within organization-endowed with limited resources. In the process, detailed knowledge has been developed on (1) how general theory and methods can be implemented in small and medium sized archives and units and become effective practices; (2) what factors determine the type of implementation that is appropriate for each body of records in each context; and (3) what skills professionals will require to conduct such operations. On this basis, teaching modules have been developed for in-house training programs, continuing education workshops, and academic curricula that will provide professionals with the competence not only to preserve over the long term society's documentary heritage in digital form, but also to ensure the accountability of organizations and institutions through the protection of the accuracy and authenticity of the digital information they produce.

Governance, law, art, science and scholarship urgently require concrete plans for the preservation of digital materials, so that today's actions, thoughts, achievements and creations will have a future and the future will have a memory.

Goal

The overall goal of InterPARES 3 was to enable small and medium sized public and private archival organizations and programs, which are responsible for the digital records resulting from government, business, research, art and entertainment, social and/or community activities, to preserve over the long term authentic records that satisfy the requirements of their stakeholders and society's needs for an adequate record of its past.

Objectives

The objectives of InterPARES 3 were:

1. to promote an environment supportive of the research goal by demonstrating to regulatory and auditing bodies and to policy makers that it is essential to integrate digital records preservation requirements in any activity that they regulate, audit or control;
2. to collaborate with small and medium sized archival organizations and programs in the development of scalable policies, strategies, procedures, and/or action plans that they can implement in order to preserve the digital materials that they expect to acquire or have already acquired, using the recommendations and products of leading edge research projects;
3. to assess the applicability of the recommendations of InterPARES and other projects about trusted record-making and recordkeeping to the situations of the small and medium sized archival organizations or programs selected as test-beds, and in particular the validity of statements about the relationship between preservers and the records creators;
4. to assess the applicability of these projects' preservation solutions to the concrete cases identified by the test-bed partners as needing immediate attention, both when the records in question are already in their custody and when they still reside with their creator;
5. to refine and further elaborate the theory and methods, concepts and principles developed by these research projects on the basis of the results of the above activities;
6. to establish when such theory and methods, concepts and principles apply across jurisdictions, regardless of legal/administrative, social and cultural environment; and, in the situation where they do not apply, to identify why, and determine the measures that are required to ensure the preservation of digital records;

7. to assist small and medium sized archival organizations or programs in addressing the legal issues that have been identified by the relevant research projects as providing obstacles to long term digital preservation, and those that could be specific to their situation;
8. to formulate models that, for each choice of preservation methods and of digital objects to be preserved, identify the ethical consequences for individuals and society;
9. to create evaluation models capable of measuring the success of the preservation solutions that have been proposed and implemented;
10. to develop models of preservation costs for various types of records and archives;
11. to develop awareness and educational materials that can a) enable the staff of small archival organizations and programs to plan for and carry out digital preservation, b) assist professional associations in promoting career development of their members, and c) provide university programs with content and structure for university courses on digital preservation; and to identify effective delivery methods;
12. to ensure transfer of the knowledge generated by this research—including actual examples and success stories—to appropriate local, national and international stakeholders; and
13. to establish a strong network of research and education on digital preservation that is deeply rooted in the various communities served by each of its partners, and that integrates academic work with social and community action.

Project Components

1. a research component (development of new knowledge through short-term and long-term projects, including general studies and case studies related to policy, records, or systems);
2. an education and training component (in the context of research projects, students apprenticeships, activities credited as part of coursework, etc.; and, with regard to the new knowledge developed, the production of curricula, syllabi, course modules and teaching materials); and
3. a knowledge-mobilization component (conference presentations, workshops, seminars, colloquia, policy manuals and other publications, public lectures, etc.) meeting the needs of both academic and community partners.

Stakeholders

The beneficiaries of the new knowledge produced by this Project are

- small and medium-sized archival organizations and units/programs (hereinafter, archives);
- archives endowed with low resources; records creators for whom such archives represent the designated preserver;

- archivists, and any other professionals whose primary responsibility is to ensure the permanent and authentic preservation of records;
- the international digital preservation community;
- the legal and law enforcement communities;
- researchers of all disciplines;
- educators in all disciplines involved in this research;
- the computer and information technology sector;
- and the citizenry at large.

Guiding Concepts

Several guiding concepts of InterPARES 3 were developed in the course of InterPARES 1 and 2.

Record: A document made or received in the course of a practical activity as an instrument or a by-product of such activity and set aside for action or reference.

Accuracy: The degree to which data, information, documents or records are precise, correct, truthful, free of error or distortion, or pertinent to the matter.

Reliability: The trustworthiness of a record as a statement of fact. It exists when a record can stand for the fact it is about and is established by examining the completeness of the record's form and the amount of control exercised on the process of its creation.

Authenticity: The trustworthiness of a record as a record; i.e., the quality of a record that is what it purports to be and that is free from tampering or corruption. Authentic records are records that have maintained their identity and integrity over time.

Authentication: A means of declaring authenticity at a point in time by a person entitled to do so (e.g., public officer, professional, certifying authority).

Trusted Record-making System: A set of rules governing the making of records, and a set of tools and mechanisms used to implement these rules. To generate reliable records, every record-making system should include in its design records capture, identification, declaration, execution and transfer systems incorporating integrated business and documentary procedures, record metadata schemes, records forms, a record profile scheme, access privileges and record-making technological requirements, along with a rigorous monitoring function to oversee the activities of the entire system.

Trusted Recordkeeping System: The whole of the rules that control the creation, maintenance use and disposition of the records of the creator and provide a circumstantial probability of the authenticity of the records, and the tools and mechanisms used to implement those rules. To maintain authentic records, every recordkeeping system should include in its design records information, indexing, storage, retrieval, access and disposition systems incorporating a recordkeeping metadata scheme, a classification scheme, a retention schedule, a registration system, a controlled recordkeeping vocabulary, access privileges and procedures for maintaining accurate and authentic records, along with a rigorous monitoring function to oversee the activities of the entire system.

Trusted Record Preservation System: The whole of the rules that control the preservation and use of the records of the creator and provide a circumstantial probability of the authenticity of the records, and the tools and mechanisms used to implement those rules. To ensure the creation and maintenance of authentic copies of a creator's records, every record preservation system should include in its design records information, selection (appraisal), acquisition, description, storage, retrieval and access systems incorporating a preservation metadata scheme, a records transfer registration scheme, an accession registration scheme, a controlled preservation vocabulary, access privileges and procedures for assessing and maintaining the authenticity of records, along with a rigorous monitoring function to oversee the activities of the entire system.

Designated Records Preserver: The entity responsible for taking physical and legal custody of and preserving (i.e., protecting and ensuring continuous access to) authentic copies of a creator's inactive records.<sup>1</sup> Be it an outside organization or an in-house unit, the role of the designated records preserver should be that of a trusted custodian for a creator's records. To be considered as a trusted custodian, the preserver must:

- act as a neutral third party, that is, demonstrate that it has no stake in the content of the records and no reason to alter records under its custody, and that it will not allow anybody to alter the records either accidentally or on purpose;
- be equipped with the knowledge and skills necessary to fulfill its responsibilities, which should be acquired through formal education in records and archives administration; and
- establish a trusted record preservation system that is capable of ensuring that accurate and authentic copies of the creator's records are acquired and preserved.

InterPARES 1 identified the necessary characteristics of digital records as follows:

Medium: The physical material or substance upon which information can be or is recorded or stored. The medium is the material support carrying the record; it is necessary to the existence of the record, which must be affixed to a support, but is a component of the technological context, not of the record.

Documentary Form: The rules of representations according to which the content of a record, its administrative and documentary context, and its authority are communicated. Form possesses both extrinsic and intrinsic elements.

Archival Bond: The network of relationships that each record has with the records belonging in the same records aggregation, whether inside or outside the system.

Five Necessary Persons: Author (the person competent for issuing the record), writer (the person competent for the articulation of the content), originator (the person responsible for the electronic space from which the record is sent), addressee (the person for whom the record is intended) and creator (the person in whose fonds the record exists).

Act: An action in which the record participates or which the record supports that is intended to create, maintain, change or extinguish a situation.

Five Necessary Contexts: Juridical-administrative (the legal-administrative environment in which the record is created, that is, made or received and set aside for action or reference), provenancial (the creator, its mandate or mission, functions, and organization), procedural (the procedure in the course of which the record is created), documentary (the fonds to which the record belong and its internal structure), technological (the technological environment in which the record was made or received, maintained and preserved)

Content: The message contained in the body of the record or which the record is meant to convey.

Element of Form: A constituent part of the record's documentary form, visible on the face of the record. It may be either extrinsic, like a seal, or intrinsic, like a subscription.

Record Metadata: The attributes of the records that demonstrate their identity and integrity (authenticity).

InterPARES 2 further clarified them:

<sup>1</sup> In the InterPARES Terminology Database, the term "preservation" is defined as "The whole of the principles, policies, rules and strategies aimed at prolonging the existence of an object by maintaining it in a condition suitable for use, either in its original format or in a more persistent format, while leaving intact the object's intellectual form." See InterPARES Terminology Database online at http://www.interpares.org/ip2/ip2\_terminology\_db.cfm.

Digital Component: A digital object that is part of one or more digital documents, and the metadata necessary to order, structure or manifest its content and form, requiring a given preservation action.

InterPARES 2 has further distinguished:

Digital Encoding: The use of discrete numeric values (such as the binary values 0 and 1) rather than a continuous spectrum of values (such as those generated by an analogue system).

Digital Data: The smallest meaningful units of information, expressed as binary bits that are digitally encoded and affixed to a digital medium.

Bitstream: Digital data encoded in an unstructured sequence of binary bits that are transmitted, stored or received as a unit.

Digital Object: A discrete aggregation of one or more bitstreams and the metadata about the properties of the object and, if applicable, methods of performing operations on the object.

Digital Document: A digital component, or group of digital components, that is saved and is treated and managed as a document.

Digital Record: A digital document that is treated and managed as a record.

Stored Digital Document: A digital document that is placed in a storage system on a digital medium and is treated and managed as a document.

Stored Digital Record: A stored digital document that is treated and managed as a record.

Manifested Digital Record: A digital record that is visualized or rendered from a stored digital record and/or stored digital component(s) in a form suitable for presentation either to a person (i.e., in human readable form) or to a computer system (i.e., in machine language). Sometimes it does not have a corresponding stored digital record, but is (re)created from fixed content data when a user's or system's actions associates them with specific form data and composition data following fixed rules (e.g., a record produced from a relational database)

Prospective Record: A document that guides what to do and/or how to do it and is managed as a record. It differs from a retrospective record, which constitutes either the enactment or the memorial of an action, and includes dispositive, probative, supporting and narrative records.<sup>2</sup> A prospective record enables or at least informs interactions, experiences or dynamic processes. It can be an instructive record or an enabling record.

Instructive Record: A subclass of prospective record that contains instructions about executing an action or process. With dispositive, enabling, narrative, probative and supporting, one of six functional categories of records. Examples of instructive records are musical scores, regulations, manuals of procedures, and instructions for filling out forms.

Enabling Record: A subclass of prospective record encoded in machine language that is actively involved in carrying out an action or process. With dispositive, instructive, narrative, probative and supporting, one of six functional categories of records. Examples of enabling records include software patches that enable a musical instrument to interact with a computer, software in online marketing sites that interprets data about a visitor's actions on the site to determine what elements of content should be presented next to that visitor, and software agents that enable interacting business applications to execute transactions autonomously.

InterPARES 2 has also identified two types of digital objects:

<sup>2</sup> Dispositive Record: A record constituting written evidence of a juridical act; Probative Record: A record for which the juridical system requires a written form as evidence of an action that came into existence and was complete before being manifested in writing; Supporting Record: A record constituting written evidence of an activity that does not result in a juridical act; Narrative Record: A record constituting written evidence of an activity that is juridically irrelevant.

Static Digital Objects: Digital objects that do not provide possibilities for changing their manifest content or form beyond opening, closing and navigating. They are records when they present all the characteristics of a record listed above. Examples are: e-mail, reports, sound recordings, video, snapshots of Web pages.

Interactive Digital Objects: Digital objects that present variable content, form, or both and the rules governing the context and form of presentation may be either fixed or variable. They are records only if they have a fixed form and a stable content, or can be considered having a bounded variability.

Fixed Form:

- The binary content is stored so that the message it conveys can be rendered with the same presentation it had on the screen when first saved (different digital presentation but same documentary presentation).
- If the same content can be presented on the screen in several different ways in a limited series of possibilities, we have a different manifested view of the same stored digital record having stable content and fixed form (different documentary presentations but same digital presentation).

Stable Content: The fact that the data and the message in the record are unchanged and unchangeable, meaning that data cannot be overwritten, altered, deleted or added to.

Bounded Variability: When changes to the form are limited and controlled by fixed rules so that the same query or interaction always generates the same result, and we have different views of different subsets of stable content, due to the intention of the author or to different operating systems or applications.

Ontologies present the basic concepts in relationship with each other on the InterPARES 2 web site (“Ontology A-Concept of a Record,” “Ontology B-Concept of the Status of Transmission of a Record,” “Ontology C-Concept of the Trustworthiness of a Record;” see: http://www.interpares.org/ip2/display\_file.cfm?doc=ip2\_ontology.pdf).

Guiding Methodological Principles

Interdisciplinarity, Multidisciplinarity and Transdisciplinarity

The Project was interdisciplinary in the measure in which its goal and objectives could only be achieved through the contribution of several disciplines, integrating methodologies, concepts, principles and techniques from a variety of fields as needed.

This process was very different from the multidisciplinary one, which examined the same problem in the context of each separate discipline and solved it within such discipline, without any integration of theory or methods, after which the results were compared and the best solutions adopted.

In contrast, transdisciplinarity was multi-referential and multi-dimensional. Whereas interdisciplinarity involved the transfer of one or more methods or ideas from a discipline to another, and multidisciplinary involved the analysis of the same object by many disciplines, transdisciplinarity, as the prefix “trans” indicates, involved thinking at the same time within, across and outside each discipline and beyond all disciplines. Its purpose was to gain an understanding of present reality, one imperative of which is the unity of knowledge. “Rigor, openness, and tolerance are the fundamental characteristics of the transdisciplinary attitude and vision. Rigor in argument, taking into account all existing data, is the best defense against possible distortions. Openness involves an acceptance of the unknown, the unexpected and the unforeseeable. Tolerance implies acknowledging the right to ideas and truths opposed to our own.”<sup>3</sup>

Transferability The ultimate goal of the Project was archival in nature, in that it was concerned with the development of trusted record-making and recordkeeping systems and of preservation systems that ensure the authenticity of the records under examination over the long term. This implies that the work carried out throughout the Project in the various disciplinary areas had to be constantly translated in archival terms and linked to archival concepts, which are the foundation upon which the systems intended to protect the records are designed. However, upon completion of the research, the archival systems needed to be made accessible and comprehensible to records creators, organizations and institutions and disciplinary researchers. In other words, the research outcomes were translated back into the language and concepts of each discipline that needed to make use of them.

Open Inquiry

InterPARES 3 espoused no epistemological perspective or intellectual definitions a priori. Instead, researchers in each case or general study identified the perspective(s), research design, and methods that they believed to be most appropriate to their inquiry. In fact, InterPARES 3 was conceived to work as a “layered knowledge” environment, in the sense that some of the research work built upon knowledge developed in the course of InterPARES; some took knowledge of similar issues developed in other research projects and in other areas of endeavour and brought it to bear on records creation and preservation; and some explored new issues and study entities never examined before and developed entirely new knowledge.

Multi-method Design

Although the overall methodological approach was action research, each case study and general study was carried out using the method and the tools that the dedicated investigating team considered the most appropriate for it. The methods used were surveys, case studies, modeling, prototyping, diplomatic and archival analysis, and text analysis. The research was guided by the research questions and by instruments developed by the International Team.

Case Study Methodology

The overall approach was guided by action research methodology, a set of disciplined, material practices that involve collaborative dialogue, participatory decision making, inclusive democratic deliberation, and the maximal participation and representation of all relevant parties. Action research took the form of ethnographic inquiry or prototype development.

The steps of the case study research were:

- Identification of the Problem -- Initially, each test-bed partner identified a body of digital material for which a preservation plan had to be developed, be it already in the custody of the partner or not. Alternatively, the partner identified a policy need, or a system to be designed and implemented.
- Data Collection -- Using archival methods, data was collected about the context and limitations of each test-bed. Subsequently, using also interviews, diplomatics, modelling, and text analyses, data was collected either about the specific body of material, its documentary forms, technological constraints, functional or cultural meaning, etc., or about a system requirement or policy needs and constraints.

- First Iterations: Testing Different Solutions in Different Contexts -- All TEAM members (co-investigators, collaborators, test-bed and resource partners, students) then reflected on the data collected for each case study and collectively articulated several possible solutions from which individual plans of action emerged and were tested. These plans of action included strategy, protocols, functional requirements, procedures, and expected outcome, as needed. The plans were implemented and tested and test results included performance assessment of the plans against benchmarks and baselines established in extant research.
- Comparison of First Iterations -- The results of the test were shared among all TEAM researchers and analyzed. An assessment of these results then allowed us to reflect on each action, and refine our respective plans of action.
- Second Iteration: Refining Solutions for Particular Contexts -- After this assessment, the process began another cycle. This second iteration accounted for anomalies in the test results, and benefitted from the insights gained from a comparison across contexts. In so doing, it allowed us to refine our plans and performance measures. The second iteration continued with small mini-iterations until a definitive plan of action was agreed upon for each context, implemented and tested again.
- Comparisons of Second Iterations -- The data were compared among cohorts –the partner organizations of the same type (e.g., city archives, university archives, communities archives) –to establish what were the critical factors that determined the most appropriate solution for these contexts and whether they were linked to documentary forms, technology, organizational culture or function, or other environmental elements. This comparison allowed us to make statements of a general type. Furthermore, twice a year, the results were compared with parallel research conducted by the other TEAMS and its results. This comparison of results did not happen in a vacuum because all international partners shared the same Web site and maintained ongoing communication.
- Reflection, Analysis, and Synthesis -- Throughout the research, the co-investigators and collaborators reflected on issues and processes and made explicit their assumptions and biases, thereby giving rise to theoretical considerations.

General Studies

The general studies were of three types:

1. Studies carried out by one TEAM or a group of TEAMS for the benefit of all TEAMS (e.g., Annotated Bibliography of International Standards, E-mail Preservation)
2. Studies in which all TEAMS took part (e.g., Terminology Database).
3. Studies conducted by a TEAM that for the benefit of that TEAM only (e.g., Annotated Canadian Standards)

4. Studies conducted by a group of TEAMS for its own benefit (e.g. Protocol Register)

General Study 01: Past and Present Digital Preservation Projects Devoted to the Long-term Preservation of Digital Records and Digital Information

Topic/Title: Past and Present Digital Preservation Projects Devoted to the Long-term Preservation of Digital Records and Digital Information

TEAM Lead: Canada

Start Date: November 2007

Abstract: Since 1999, the InterPARES Project has been examining the complex issue of preserving digital records. The Project is not alone in its efforts to address the issues concerned with the long-term preservation of digital records, however. Since 1999, various research projects and related initiatives have been devoted to similar purposes. The objective of this study is to document the current projects and some of their findings. Given the dynamic nature of the digital preservation environment, readers should consider the report generated by this study to be a constantly evolving document, to which periodic revisions will be made to incorporate newly discovered or updated information, including information about new projects.

Final Report: Available at http://www.interpares.org/ip3/display\_file.cfm?doc=ip3\_canada\_gs01\_digital\_preservation\_projects.pdf

General Study 02: International Terminology Database

Topic/Title: International Terminology Database

TEAM Lead: International Alliance

Start Date: 2007

Purpose: The purpose of the InterPARES 3 Terminology Database (ITD) is to support records professionals – archivists, records managers and information managers – in understanding records-related concepts that address issues of preserving authentic records in electronic systems. Founded in Archival Science, Diplomats and Information Science, the terms in this database are central to the InterPARES research, and facilitate communication and understanding across records-related disciplines.

Content: The InterPARES 3 Terminology Database includes a Glossary and a Dictionary. The Glossary is an authoritative list of terms and their definitions that are core to our understanding of the evolving records creation, keeping and preservation environments. These are the definitions used in the course of InterPARES research. Definitions are context specific, however, and terms may not be used uniformly by all our test bed partners. When a term used by a particular test bed differs in its definition from the same term as it is used by InterPARES researchers, that term will be defined in the research documents pertaining to that test bed.

To reflect the international nature of records-related disciplines in general and the InterPARES research in particular, the Glossary includes translations of many terms in the languages of our partners. This work of translation is ongoing and terms will be added as translations are submitted and approved.

The Dictionary includes definitions of the same terms as they are commonly used in specific disciplines or communities of practice. It includes the source discipline where appropriate. The dictionary definitions come from existing dictionaries and glossaries in common use.

Structure: The Glossary provides the approved term and definition used in research (working documents and published documents) that comes from IP3. As rapidly as technology is evolving, so records-related terms may be refined. To understand this evolution, terms in the Glossary have been drawn from the InterPARES 1 and 2 glossaries, and new terms or definitions have been added as appropriate. If the definition in current use is different from those of InterPARES 1 and 2, the latter are reported in the Dictionary. Each term in the glossary lists the part of speech, and provides a definition, identified by source as InterPARES 1, 2 or 3.

The Dictionary provides discipline-specific definitions of terms relevant to the InterPARES research and records professionals. Each term is defined by the glossary definition, in bold type, followed by definitions common to other disciplines or communities of practice. Each discipline or community of practice is identified at the end of the definition.

General Study 03: Canadian Legislation, Standards, Policies, Regulations and Guidelines Relevant to the InterPARES 3 Project

Topic/Title: Canadian Legislation, Standards, Policies, Regulations and Guidelines Relevant to the InterPARES 3 Project

TEAM Lead: Canada

Start Date: May 2008

Abstract: The objective of this study is to provide annotated citations for Canadian federal and provincial legislation, standards, policies, regulations and guidelines relevant to the research activities of the InterPARES 3 Project, particularly TEAM Canada. This includes legislation, standards, etc., that are relevant to the goals, objectives, research activities and expected outcomes of the Project as a whole and to TEAM Canada in particular. Given the dynamic nature of federal and provincial legislation, standards, etc., readers should consider the report generated by this study to be a constantly evolving document, to which periodic revisions will be made to incorporate newly discovered or updated information.

General Study 04: International Standards Relevant to the InterPARES 3 Project

Topic/Title: International Standards Relevant to the InterPARES 3 Project

TEAM Lead: Canada

Start Date: October 2010

Abstract: The objective of this study is to provide annotated citations for all international standards (ISO standards, ICA standards, etc.) relevant to the research activities of the InterPARES 3 Project. These include standards that are relevant to the goals, objectives, research activities and expected outcomes of the Project as a whole. It should also be noted that the search for relevant international standards is not limited to de facto standards, it also includes de jure standards. Within this context, the term “international” is interpreted to include standards that are issued by, and/or that might apply to, any organizations that have a multinational, sectoral or discipline-wide composition. Given the dynamic nature of the international standards environment, readers should consider the report generated by this study to be a constantly evolving document, to which periodic revisions will be made to incorporate newly discovered or updated information.

General Study 05: Keeping and Preserving Email

Topic/Title: Keeping and Preserving E-mail

Team Lead: Italy

Authors: Gianfranco Pontevolpe (CNIPA) Silvio Salza
(Università di Roma Sapienza)

Documents: Final Report

Abstract: The aim of this study is to investigate the technical aspects relevant to the e-mail creation, capture and maintenance (i.e., records management) and permanent preservation (i.e., archival) processes. This is important since e-mail messages have a rather complex structure, and because of the need to take into account the peculiar infrastructure through which they are delivered (i.e. the Internet).

To achieve this goal we have considered both the functionalities of the commercial products for e-mail management, including the so-called “e-mail archiving” systems, and the requirements expressed in several important reference documents. Devising precise and systematic procedures for e-mail records management and/or permanent preservation is not a goal of this document, and indeed cannot be done in a sufficiently general case, since these procedures may heavily depend on the characteristics of the organization where the process is taking place.

For this reason the definition of a more detailed e-mail records management and permanent preservation model should be carried out as a separate task, within the InterPARES 3 Project, and deserves a more thorough discussion, involving records management, archival and IT competences.

General Study 05: Guidelines and Recommendations for E-Mail Records Management and Long-Term Preservation

Topic/Title: Guidelines and Recommendations for E-Mail Records Management and Long-Term Preservation

Team Lead: Italy

Authors: Massimiliano Grandi

Documents: Final Report

Abstract: This general study has divided proposed recommendations for email records management according to the two main phases of the records life cycle. Most relate to the period of time in which e-mail records are current or semi-current, namely when the records creator uses them to carry out its ordinary business activities.

A smaller set of recommendations refers to e-mail records selected for long-term preservation, when they become historical records transferred to the custody of a trusted preserver and are not used on a regular basis, and are preserved mostly for cultural reasons and/or sporadic use for reference and action.

Several recommendations are intended to establish good practices to create e-mail records intended to be integrated in a record-keeping system. Recommendations for long-term preservation of e-mail records focus on aspects of management that need to be modified when records become historical or on actions that are exclusively intrinsic to long-term preservation (e.g. use of given formats, organization of procedures for migration).

Recommendations of the case study include:

- integration of email with recordkeeping systems
- The operation of capture and filing must be performed solely through email accounts which have been programmed to directly communicate with the RKS
- Maintenance of an audit trail for an email record
- Inclusion of a long term preservation plan that addresses best practice as well as preserving the email record and all of its components
- Inclusion of a description of email elements, (such as attachments, digital signatures and links) associated with the email record

General Study 07: Organizational Culture

Topic/Title: Organizational Culture

TEAM Lead: Canada

Start Date: November 2009

Abstract: The objective of this study is to develop a consistent framework for analyzing the impact of organizational culture on recordkeeping and preservation practices across various case studies in InterPARES 3 within the national context of Canada. Findings gleaned from this research may also be applicable to a general study of the dynamics amongst organizational cultures, recordkeeping and preservation practices for all the other countries participating in InterPARES 3.

General Study 14: Preserving the Registry System

Topic/Title: Preserving the registry system

Team Lead: Italy

Authors: Gabriele Bezzi (Regione Emilia Romagna – PARER)

Documents:

Abstract: This general study was created to address the preservation of the protocol register and is carried out by TEAM Catalonia, Italy and Brazil. The general study was proposed by TEAM Catalonia in Rio de Janeiro in 2009 at the International Summit on September 30 – October 2, 2009.

Its aim is to analyze the constitutive aspects and the functions of the protocol register in an ERDMS according laws, regulations and practice in several countries, in particularly Italy, Brazil and Spain (Catalonia). It also aims to analyze the possible modalities of preservation of the protocol register, which is considered to be a specific record constituted by the collection of registrations made in a certain period of time (daily registry, annual registry).

In particular, we will proceed by comparing the practices and the rules of the three different countries, as specified above, in order to identify a minimum core of necessary and sufficient information for the constitution of a preserving protocol register. Then the TEAMS will prepare methodology and metadata for the preservation of the protocol register itself, and the eventual functions of metadata and information contained and stored in protocol register in order to preserve and verify the authenticity of the records identified through the protocol registration.

We will also provide some indications about the best practices of management of the protocol register within a system of records management and its organizational impact, dealing, in particular, with the management of electronic records, analyzing work flows, responsibilities and possible levels of normalization and standardization.

General Study 16: Digital Preservation Cost-Benefit Models

Topic/Title: Digital Preservation Cost-Benefit Models

TEAM Lead: Canada

Start Date: May 2010

Abstract: The objective of the Cost-Benefit General Study is to determine a measureable framework for assessing the benefit of recordkeeping systems. Although it is possible to establish the benefits of digital preservation, most organizations or institutions have only encountered the initial costs of the beginning stages of a digital preservation project. The study is not intended to determine the actual costs and benefits; it is to determine or develop the parameters that an organization should consider and examine when undertaking a cost-benefit analysis.

The Graduate Research Assistants were responsible for developing a template that identifies the various cost and benefit parameters and that justifies why each of these parameters is relevant to such an analysis. The actual parameters that are relevant in any particular situation may change completely from one institution to another, depending on whether it is public or private, for profit or not-for-profit, international vs. national, etc. The Graduate Research Assistants collected preservation costs and benefit information from the InterPARES 3 test beds as well as from other organizations.

General Study 17: Public Sector Audit Reports on Digital Recordkeeping

Topic/Title: Public Sector Audit Reports on Digital Recordkeeping

Start Date: July 2010

Abstract: The objective of this study is a comparative study of public sector audit reports: (a) to help identify common themes in existing policy, practice, or tools that impact on the effectiveness of program or service delivery of archival or other recordkeeping services and (b) to shed light on how resources are being allocated to manage information.

General Study 19: File Viewers

Topic/Title: File Viewers

TEAM Lead: Canada

Start Date: January 2010

Abstract: During the UBC InterPARES 3 case study on preparing files on preparing shared drive files for migration into an electronic content management (ECM) system (Rogers et al., 2010), the co-investigators identified and adopted a number of utility applications to expedite their work. These utility applications included: a disk space manager, used to collect drive statistics, analyze file formats, create historical profiles, and facilitate metadata discovery; a file manager, used to apply a unique identifier and rename records; a duplication finder, used to identify and remove duplicates based on byte-by-byte comparison; a format identifier, used to identify and resolve missing file extensions; and an empty folder identifier, used to count and (initially) remove empty folders.

In relation to this, the ECM system purchased by the City of Surrey included a file viewer that allowed users to open and annotate specialty drawing files where they did not have the native application loaded on their computer. Although subsequent testing revealed that the viewer module was not well integrated to the ECM system and it was not adopted, the idea that a file viewer might extend the life of a file format was appealing. As a secondary consideration in favour of investigating file viewers, the co-investigators found that during pre-migration file renaming activities, opening files to validate contents was a time-consuming activity, since only a few applications could be kept open on the task bar, and time was spent waiting for applications to open or load, and in flipping between native and utility applications. A file viewer that would enable viewing of multiple formats from a single point appeared to be an avenue worth pursuing.

Seeking to investigate file viewer further, the co-investigators worked with InterPARES 3 to formulate research questions, and four areas of interest were identified: how do file viewers work; what software is available for use; how accurately do file viewers render files; and what role might file viewers play in digital preservation.

International Summits & Symposiums

The members of the International Alliance held bi-annual Summits and Symposia over the course of the InterPARES Project. This provided an opportunity for the Directors of each international InterPARES TEAM to meet face-to-face for the Summit and Symposium in order to exchange information about their most recent research findings, to foster integration and cohesiveness. The primary purpose of the Symposia was to present the Project's preliminary research findings to local audiences to bolster awareness of the Project and its activities.

The presence of all team Directors ensured that the specific research activities and preliminary findings of their TEAM, particularly those of primary interest and relevance to international audiences, were shared with the other International Partners and, especially, with local archival and records management professional practitioners and academics.

The InterPARES Project held 9 Summits and 10 Symposia (the Project's closing Symposium was not preceded by a Summit, for obvious reasons), at various locations all over the world. The InterPARES website had a webpage for each Summit and Symposium on its access-restricted area to be used by TEAM participants.
